MRS. HARTLEY'S CASE.

The Supreme Court Sustains the Decision of the Lower Court.

The decision in the Hartley case has been handed down and sustains the lower Court in all essential points. On the objection raised by Gen. Clark relative to the jurors having expressed opinions, the Court held that the defendants attorneys having accepted such jurors, they waived all right to ask for a reversal of the case on the grounds of incompetent jurors in the Supreme Court.

The point that the jury had visited the scene of the killing without the defendant was disposed of in the same way. The defendant's attorneys allowed it to be done and made no objections. As to the juror Johnson the preemptory challenges were not exhausted, and they could have retired him from the jury had they been so disposed.

The ruling of the lower court relative to insanity was sustained on the ground that defendant's attorneys made no attempt to prove insanity. In other words the defendant suffered the disadvantage of having attorneys who allowed the prosecution to have it all their own way, and did not take advantage of the remedies allowed by law.

General Clark did not come into the case until after it was lost in the lower court.

The opinion is by Bonfield, and concurred in by the other judges.

Why no Reward.

The question is continually being asked why the U. S. Government don't offer a reward for Heney if they are so anxious to get him. In days gone by, the Government used to offer rewards for the arrest and conviction of men charged with crime. Then the Department of justice decided that the offer of rewards caused the detectives to manufacture evidence to commit men. The system was finally done away with, and now detectives and U. S. Marshals are under regular salary. This is why there is no reward for Heney, but when the proper times comes, Heney will be in Carson City.

We Don't Bite.

Some one sends us a communication from Tahoe City to the effect that a trout 20 feet long sporting in plain sight of the place and creating great excitement. He suggests writing up the story and making a sensation of the incident. We will gladly do it as soon as he sends a check for the trout. Our regular rates for those fish sensations at Lake Tahoe are $2 a foot in advance. The instant the money reaches the office we can figure out how long the trout ought to be.

This is the last ditch of the gold men. If they can make the country believe that the old parties will remonetize silver and save off the inevitable another four years, they will gain another breathing spell. The Reno Journal is astonished to learn that the bound copies of the Nevada statutes cost less than ever this year, although they are larger than usual. The Secretary of State let them to the lowest bidder. Perhaps that accounts for it.
